Syn. Œ(hell, Stüd, Ant(h)ell. A Œ(hell is a constituent "part" of a whole and similar to it; a Stüd (piece) is one single thing belonging to a certain higher thing. Ant(h)ell is that part or piece of anything, over which somebody possesses a right or on which a right is assured him (portion, share).

Syn. Œ(h)ellen, eint(h)ellen, abt(h)ellen, zer(h)ellen. Œ(h)ellen is generally to separate a whole into parts. Eint(h)ellen (to dispose, etc.) denotes that one separates the greater whole into smaller parts of a definite regular number, or a thing of higher rank into parts of inferior rank. This may be done by the mind merely; if this separation is also made evident to the senses by outward signs, it then becomes abt(h)ellen (to part off, to divide, etc.). Zer(h)ellen (to part asunder, to disconnect, dissolve) is separating the constituent parts of a whole in such a manner that they exist as independent wholes for themselves.

Syn. Th(i)er, Steb. The term Th(i)er is limited to domestic animals. It is, however, far more comprehensive than the English "cattle," which merely implies oxen and cows; vid. ferberlein, zugvieh, Waidvieh, Edelvieh, Waidvieh u. fm. The ant is considered an industrious Th(i)er and the bee a prudent Th(i)er. Hence the term "animal" is not the full equivalent for Th(i)er; for, although all living things are animals, the word cannot be used in common life for an insect, a bird, or a fish, etc., but these words must be substituted for the German Th(i)er as the context may require.

Syn. Th(i)erisch, viehisch, brutal. Th(i)erisch in man is every thing that he has in common with other animals. This is not opposed to the prerogatives of his reasoning nature, and does not exclude them. That which is opposed to them, is viehisch. Every gratification of sensuality has something th(i)erisch (of the animal) in it, but that indulgence which by its violation of nature's laws or by its extreme excess degrades man from the rank obtained by his reason, is viehisch (brutal, bestial). Brutal is an epithet of the coarsest sensuality.

Syn. Thräne, Zähre. Thräne denotes every trickling drop; Zähre only that one which flows from the source of pain. Zähre has therefore invariably a moral sense, Thräne may have likewise a purely physical one. Moreover, Zähre flows only from motives of benevolence. Thräne is also the expression of pain at pain felt by one's self. "Tear" is the only word in English.

thränen, v. n. (h.) to run with tears; to weep; der Weinſtock thränt, the vine bleeds.

Syn. Thränen, welen. Thränen is, in the first place, used only in speaking of the eye, from which drops flow. Welen is also used of the person, who sheds the tears. Hence welen is an effect and expression of mental pain, whilst the Thränen of the eyes may proceed from any cause whatever, e.g. from smoke, cold, a cold, etc. Hence thränen may be given by "to cry," welen by "to weep."

tilgen, v. a. 1. to blot out; 2. to eradicate, efface, extinguish; 3. to pay, annul; eine Schuld —, to pay, discharge, cancel a debt.
Syn. tilgen, vertilgen, zerstören, ausrotten, vernichten. tilgen corresponds exactly to the English, "to root out, extirpate, eradicate," and vernichten is "to annihilate." We tilgen something that is disagreeable, disadvantageous, etc., to us, e. g. weeds, vermin, debts; and do so by extirpating (ausrotten) the first, and figuratively speaking, the second, the last by paying it. The English for this is "to get rid of." Vertilgen always implies violent measures; it is "to exterminate." Hence we may say, vertilgen weeds, vermin, but not debts. A person vertilgt merely those things, which are composed of component parts, by disturbing their state of rest, by strewing them asunder, etc. Time zerstört everything, but it does not vernichten. The use of the latter, unless it is applied to God, is always figurative or hyperbolical.

Syn. Umzingeln, umgeben, umringen. A person is umgeben (surrounded) by many others, even if the circle is not yet completely closed. When the king appears at the court, he is umgeben by the court-dignitaries, but not umringt (encircled), still less umzingelt; for they only stand behind him and on both sides. Moreover, umgeben is said also of a circle that consists of inanimate things. The sun and the moon are sometimes umgeben by a bright circle which is called a halo. But that which is umringt, is shut in on all sides and into a perfect circle. We therefore umringen something that it may have no egress, and no one an ingress to the same. Umzingeln is to close something in more narrowly, to obstruct the egress and to be able to attack it from a short distance. Umringen, therefore, may either have a friendly or a hostile object in view, hut umzingeln (to environ, encompass) only a hostile one.

Syn. Unbeaglich, unangenehm. It is unangenehm (disagreeable) to us when a letter does not come which we have anxiously expected, but it is not unbehaglich. On the other hand, a cold room in the winter is very unbehaglich (uncomfortable). Unbeaglichkeit arises, moreover, from a vague feeling which we can as little analyse as its causes, but we are more clearly aware of what is unangenehm, as likewise of the causes.

un'beständig, adj. inconstant, changeable, unstable, unsteady, fickle, variable, mutable.

Syn. Unbeständig, veränderlich, wandelmützig. Veränderlich (mutable, changeable) is an epithet for a person or thing that often and easily changes, or for anything in general which can be changed. Fashion is veränderlich, a man is veränderlich, etc. The proportion between the sides of a triangle is called veränderlich and not unbeständig. The former, therefore, points more to the susceptibility of undergoing change and is not always a fault. Unbeständig implies more a defect of constancy in the state or relation once entered into, and is always a fault, e. g. ein unbeständiger (inconstant) man; unbeständiges (fickle) weather. Wandelmützig (irresolute) can naturally be only used of persons. A man is wandelmützig when he often changes his thoughts, his choice, his resolves before the execution of them takes place; he is unbeständig and veränderlich when he often changes his will or plan after having begun the execution of them. The wandelmützig caution not direct his choice to any object with firmness. The unbeständige and veränderliche does not long remain constant to the choice he has already made; the former cannot make a beginning, the latter cannot persevere.

Syn. Ungern, unwillig, unfreiwillig. When a man compels himself to do anything that is disagreeable to another, he does it ungernd and unwillig; he simply does that unfreiwillig, to which he has been compelled by others. We often do something freiwillig spontaneously, voluntarily that we nevertheless do ungernd (not readily) and unwillig (unwillingly). Unwillig is distinguished from ungernd by this, that we do ungernd what is excessively disagreeable to us, but unwillig, what we detest, and with such a degree of annoyance or repugnance as to betray it by our behaviour. When any one does anything ungernd (not cheerfully), it is disagreeable to him, even if he does not allow it to be perceived; when he does anything unwillig (reluctantly, with repugnance), other persons can perceive it by his looks, gestures, and words.

Syn. I. Ungeſchäft, Zweifelhaft, unentſchieden, verlegen. (We are ungeſchäft (uncertain) when we do not know whether something ought to be desired and whether it is good or essentially necessary to desire that something. We are Zweifelhaft (doubtful, dubious) when we do not know which of two things we ought to desire, seeing that we have reasons equally cogent and potent for either side. Unentſchiedenheit (irresolution) is the difficulty itself of deciding upon something, as long as we are still undecided for want of a preponderance of reasons, and thus becomes Verlegenheit (embarrassment), when we positively must decide upon something, and yet cannot make up our minds to adopt one thing or the other. Ungeſchäft (uncertainty) makes us indifferent, Zweifelhaftigkeit (doubt), uneasy, Unentſchiedenheit, inactive, Verlegenheit, distressed, anxious, and fearful. In its highest degree Verlegenheit becomes a dilemma causing great mental distress.

Syn. II. Ungeſchäft, Zweifelhaft (as applied to things). A proposition, whether in itself considered to be true or false, is ungeſchäft so long as the mind does not fully comprehend all the reasons that tend to demonstrate its truth, or as long as there are not yet sufficient reasons for regarding it as false. It is Zweifelhaft (doubtful) when the reasons for and against it are equally balanced.

Thus the spring or the piece of lead which moves the clock is called the Prinzip (principle) of its motion. The Ursache (cause) is the Prinzip of reality, and thereby it is generally distinguished from a Prinzip, for there are also Prinzipien of possibility and decision.

Syn. Ur(h)teil, Ur(s)chied, Spruch, Erkenntnis, Bescheid. Ur(s)chied is distinguished from Ur(h)teil, Spruch and Bescheid by this, that it is an opinion which contains the declared will of such persons who assemble at certain periods to deliberate upon public or national affairs, and form resolutions which obtain a legal power as soon as they are confirmed by the head of the state. Ur(h)teile, Sprüche and Bescheide, on the other hand, concern private affairs, but in such a manner, that the two first are only used for the decision in suits of law. An Ur(h)teil (judgment) is distinguished, however, from Spruch (sentence) or an Ausspruch, by being the decision of a law-judge or of a college endowed with judicial authority, whilst on the other hand a Spruch or an Ausspruch is also the decision of an arbitrator or the verdict of a jury. An Erkenntnis (decision) is as well the Ur(h)teil of a court of law as the Spruch of a collective body of men versed in jurisprudence. A Bescheid is an answer, a decree, which superiors give to a representation or inquiry, and by which the party so inquiring or representing must regulate his conduct.
ur'räst(e)ilen, v. a. and n. (über etwas) 1. to pass sentence, decide; 2. to judge; to form, give one's opinion.
Syn. Ur(h)stellen, beur(h)teilen, richten. I ur(h)teile (form a judgment) that something is true or false, good or bad. Richten (to judge, decree), however, is to ur(h)teilen after such a manner that the Ur(h)teil has a decisive power. Concerning learned works every one can ur(h)teilen (form a judgment), but no one dares richten (pass sentence). He who beur(h)teilt (criticizes) something, affirms or denies the perfection or faults of any object.

Whatever, therefore, can receive another nature and a different being, is wandelbar, whereas that is veränderlich which retains its nature and being and can only become different in certain cases. That is berhehlen, which is not intended to be seen; thus a person berheimlicht (hides, secretes, conceals) something under his cloak or himself behind a door, etc. A person berhehlt something by preventing it from becoming known to those who have an interest in gaining a knowledge of it. Syn. Verdenfen, betargen, verübeln. When a person thinks it wrong, injudicious, or foolish on the part of another, he uses verdenfen, and indeed because he considers that the other is principally injuring himself by what he is doing. But when that other person injures others by what he is doing, then the former thinks it wrong or wicked in him to do so; this he expresses by betargen. A person verdenft it on the part of the huyer, when he gives more for an article than it is worth, and on the part of the seller when he sells that article at a loss or under its fair market-value; both do not act rightly, but they only injure themselves. A person verdenft it of a man otherwise estimable, if he lends money to a young spendthrift. For, by doing so, he injures another. When a person takes anything ill or amiss, i. e. when he thinks that another has acted wrong towards him, he then uses verübeln.

Syn. Verrießlich, ärgerlich, grämlich, launisch, mürrisch. Verrießlich and ärgerlich are distinguished from the rest by this, that the motives or reasons of the former are objective, whilst those of the latter are subjective. It is usual, therefore, to assign the cause or motive why a person is verrießlich and ärgerlich. An impatient person soon becomes verrießlich, if he is kept waiting too long, and a passionate person soon becomes ärgerlich, particularly if he thinks that it has been done on purpose. Moreover those persons are said to be ärgerlich who are easily vexed about trifles; invalids, for instance, are generally ärgerlich. He that complains and laments is grämlich; he that is mürrisch is constantly finding fault; he that is launisch is inconstant, at times pleased, at other times displeased, without having any just cause for either: sometimes he is grämlich and mürrisch, sometimes cheerful and contented. Children can easily be grämlich, but not mürrisch, for they can complain, but not find fault. Spoiled children, and women too delicately nurtured are launisch. Hence it appears that verrießlich means sore, ärgerlich, indignant, touchy, testy, and also cross, peevish; grämlich is whining, fretful; launisch, capricious, fickle; and mürrisch, grumbling, scolding, snappish.

Syn. Verdruß, Ärger. Verdruß (originally the same as Plage) is merely the soreness or displeasure itself which that causes us which any one does; Ärger is an anger, an irritation, which works more upon the feeling itself than upon external objects. Verdruß depresses, Ärger excites the mind. When the injustice committed by others affects us nearly it makes us sad; when we regard it as deserving of punishment we Ärger uns at it. Verdruß affects the mind, Ärger the gall. Hence it appears that Verdruß is vexation, Ärger annoyance, irritation. vid. also Mißderegüen.

Syn. Verfröhten, berleiten, betrögen. One verfröht the will and berleitet the understanding. When one wishes to verfröhten a man, one endeavours to work upon his will and to deceive by exciting certain desires; when one wishes to berleiten another to a thing, he endeavours to work upon his understanding, and to deceive it by specious arguments. He that is verfröht acts therefore without reflection, the berleitet person reflects, but his judgment has been blinded or warped. A person verfröht unprotected innocence, berleitet short-sighted simplicity; verfröhten, therefore, is to seduce, and berleiten to mislead, to misguide. He who raises a hope which he does not realize, and consequently deceives an expectation founded in full confidence in his word, betrögt (deceives). The Verfröhter (seducer) must often betrögen; he must raise hopes which he does not intend to fulfill or cannot, in order to lead astray (verfröhten).

Syn. Verhalten, Ausführung, Betragen, Benehmen. The Ausführung of a young man is ascertained by many of his actions. They say, for instance, the Ausführung of a young man is good or bad. Verhalten is the agreement between our active and passive conduct, and the duties which we have to do under certain circumstances. In Betragen we consider acts in so far as they are merits or defects of the understanding and of the heart. Soldiers have sich verhalten (conducted themselves) well, inasmuch as they have performed their duty, and have sich betragen (behave) well, in so far as that which they have done is a proof of their valour, the chief virtue of persons of their profession. In the one instance they have sich verhalten (kept themselves) strict to their duty, in the other they have sich betragen (borne or carried themselves) courageously and coolly. Betragen is the result and sign of prudence, skill, address, pliancy, presence of mind, or else of the absence of these qualities. This, therefore, is "behaviour" and Ausführung "conduct."

verfa'uf'bar, adj. vid. verfa'uf'lich.
verfa'ufen, v. a. to sell, vend, dispose of; mit Schaden —, to undersell.
Syn. Verfaufen, verbanen, abſetzen, betreiben. The parting with any article for a certain price is denoted by verfaufen and verbanen. Verbanen differs, however, from betreiben in this, that it alludes to or implies a longer or shorter negotiation, in which an agreement is entered into concerning the final conditions of the contract. The act of offering on both sides is called banen. Such a banen may last some time, when both parties are very intent upon increasing their own advantage, and hence verbanen frequently expresses betreiben together with the accessory idea of self-advantage, and is, therefore, used in a contemptuous sense. Abſetzen is selling the goods in so far as the stock of goods is issued by their sale; this can take place by supplying a large order from one single person; when any one disposes of a great number of them to several buyers and especially living remote from each other, then one says he betreibt them, or he carries on a large Vertrieb in this article. Hence verfaufen is "to sell," verbanen "to bargain," abſetzen "to dispose of," and betreiben means "to carry on business, to do business."

verleihen, v. a. to backbite, calumniate, slander, traduce, defame.
Syn. Verleihen, verunglimpfen, lästern, answärzen, spitterrichten. He who verleumdet a person to others, relates to them false or unsubstantiated facts to the detriment of that person's character. He who verunglimpft him, judges his qualities or actions harshly, illiberally, odiously. The highest degree of verunglimpfen is lästern, for one lästert that person on whose perfectly moral and honourable actions and in whose genuine good qualities one passes a judgment degrading in the highest degree. According to this definition, therefore, verleumden is "to backbite or to scandalize," for scandal is either false or not proved; verunglimpfen is "to cry down, to detract from, to aspersion," and lästern is "to calumniate, to slander, to vilify." Now, verleumden and verunglimpfen together constitute answärzen, in so far as the person so verleumdet and verunglimpft stood in good repute previously, and in so far as the motive for such scandal was the exciting of suspicion and distrust against him. This is therefore "to hiacken, to lihel, to traduce." Spitterrichten is to judge trivial, nay, the most trifling faults with too much severity. It has generally for its object that of convincing others of one's own immaculate conduct and of inducing others to form a high opinion of the strictness of one's own principles. This is "to carp or cavil at," or, more familiarly but more correctly, "to pick flaws, to run down."

vermögend, adj. 1. powerful, strong; 2. able; 3. rich, opulent, wealthy.
Syn. Vermögend, bemittelt, wohlhabend, begütert, reich. The two first denote a man who possesses sufficient property or means to procure himself some degree of comfort. Wohlhabend expresses a greater amount of property or means. A man is wohlhabend when he has a competency and when his income enables him to procure all the comforts which his station in life and his habits can rationally require. Begütert is stronger still than wohlhabend, and is principally said of those whose property either entirely or partly is vested in land or tenements. Reich is the highest term, and expresses a great superabundance of all temporal possessions. Vermögend is therefore "substantial," bemittelt "of some means, of means," wohlhabend "well off, independent, or well to do," begütert "of real property," and reich "rich or wealthy."

Syn. I. Vernehmen, hören. We hear (hören) a sound, when it generally makes an impression on our organs of hearing, but we only vernemen it when we distinguish it; hence vernemen in this sense is "to hear distinctly."

Syn. II. Vernehmen, verstehen. In order to understand speech fully, it is necessary, first, that we properly distinguish the syllables and words of which it is composed, and, secondly, that we sufficiently recognize the sense of the speech by means of those words and their context. But to do this, it is further requisite that we be sufficiently acquainted with the language employed by the speaker and with the subject he discourses upon. Hence it is evident that, however distinctly a person may vernemen (hear) or catch the words the speaker utters, he will be totally unable to verstehen (understand) him without previously having a knowledge of the language used, or, if in his own language, of the things forming the topic of that discourse.

Sicherheit geben and stellen take place by removing the apprehension that some one will not act up to his obligations, and either can take place by several modes of proceeding. Sicherheit stellen, by the more formal word stellen, is distinguished from Sicherheit geben, inasmuch as it takes place before legal authorities. This is, therefore, "to give or find bail"; the other is "to give security."

Syn. I. Verstellen, verunstalten, entstellen. Verstellen merely denotes that a man by an alteration of his figure has become difficult to be recognized, without de-ciding whether he has become uglier in consequence of his alteration. Verunstalten denotes that his figure has lost some of its beauty and perfection. Entstellen expresses both these ideas together; he who is entstellt, is uglier and less perfect as to his form, and in consequence of this impairment has become so changed as not to be recog-nized. Every kind of mutilation verunstaltet (impairs) a man; but it does not follow that it versteilt (disguises), and entstellt (disfigures) him.

Syn. II. Verstellen (sich), stellen (sich). Sich verstellen is not to allow one's real opin-ions to be known; sich stellen is to endeavor to palm off on another as one's opinions those which are not so in real-ity; the first is, therefore, "to dissem-bel," the second "to feign, to simulate."

Syn. Vormals, vor Zeiten, ehemals, vor diesem, vor Alters, vordem. The most remote and venerable antiquity is denoted by vor Alters (in ancient times.) Vor Alters (in early ages, in olden times, in times of yore) men reached a more advanced age than now. Vor Zeiten (in former times) does not designate so remote a period, nevertheless it is distinguished from vormals and ehemals by its pointing out an intermediate time of several ages, whilst vormals and ehemals may signify a time past in the same generation or age. One says then: In former times (vor Zeiten) the nobles of Europe lived in their castles and in a constant state of feud. When vormals and ehemals are used of a period of time that is passed, the former denotes a comparison with the present. This is denoted by "formerly." Vor diesem (ere now, before this) denotes quite an indefinite past time which may have formed part of the life-time of the speaker or may have been before his time. Vordem (heretofore, whilom, late, ex —) is in common life obsolete; it is still used in the chancery style, and is equivalent to ehemals.

In a Vorrede, but even the object and utility of the book, the manner in which the reader ought to use it, the importance of the subject-matter, etc., are mentioned. In English an introduction is usually somewhat longer than a preface; Vorbericht (preambly) may therefore be rendered by preface and Vorrede by introduction.

Waffe, f. (pl. —n) 1. weapon, arms, instrument of attack or defence; 2. claw, talon of an animal; vid. Waffent; 3. T. tools, instruments.

Syn. Waffen, Gemeß, Rüstung, Gefehß, Stück, Gefehß. Waffen, Gemeß and Rüstung are first of all such instruments of war as the warrior carries at or on his body; Gefehß (artillery, ordnance) such as follow the army and are drawn by animals, as cannon. The word Waffen (weapons) denotes in its most extended sense everything that can be used for attack, for defence or protection; hence even such limbs of animals as serve for attack or defence are called Waffen, as horns, teeth, claws, etc. In the more limited sense we understand by Waffen (arms) the artificial portable instruments which the warrior uses as well for attack as defence. Under the word Rüstung we understand all the usual artificial Waffen of the warrior as well for attack as for protection; his accoutrements or equipment, or else his mail, helmet, harness, armlets and greaves or, in a word, his "armour." Gemeß comprise only instruments of attack and not weapons of defence; they are "arms of offence." The word Stück is used for single cannons (= "piece"); thus we have dreiß, sechß, zweißündig Stücke, three-pounders, six-pounders, twelve-pounders. The word Gefehß is now obsolete as a military term, though still used by poets; it corresponds to the English "holt" or "shaft."

Passers-by are put on their guard by certain Warnungszeichen, or signs of warning, when a roof is being fresh-tiled in a street. Syn. Warten, abwarten, erwarten. The main idea conveyed by warten (to wait) is that of remaining in the same situation (in one place or position) without requiring any secondary idea to complete its full meaning. I have gewartet (waited) here more than an hour, merely says: I can no longer remain inactive, I must resolve upon something. Abwarten (await) adds to the idea of warten the preponderating secondary idea of continuing or persevering until the desired result is obtained, which puts an end to the warten. Finally, erwarten (to expect) is distinguished from both by the prominent accessory idea of something about to happen. According to the nature of this something is the erwarten either agreeable or disagreeable; vid. also barren.

Syn. Wetter, Witterung. Witterung denotes those changeable circumstances, which commonly change according to the difference of climates and seasons, the Wetter those which change under the same climate and during the same season of the year. Witterung signifies the nature of the atmosphere during a longer period of time, Wetter during a shorter. The Germans say: it is beautiful Wetter (weather) when the sun shines and it is not rainy or windy; on the other hand, the Witterung (climate or weather) is by so much the more severe in a country the farther it lies to the north. They say, moreover, to-day is beautiful Wetter (weather), but this spring, this summer, etc., we have beautiful Witterung. In English "weather" has both significations, and "climate" or "season" can seldom be substituted for it in translating Witterung.

Syn. Zinsen, Renten, Eintünfte. Zinsen und Renten consist only of that which is given for the use of a piece of ground or of capital. Eintünfte, on the other hand, comprehends all kinds of useful things, which come in, as it were, yearly. The merchant reckons up the profits of his trade, the artist the payments for the productions of his art, the person on pay counts in his pay as part of his Eintünfte, as well as doing so with his Renten and Zinsen. In general Renten are distinguished from the Eintünfte from a salary or from the profit of a trade, but they include the Zinsen of one's capital (compare Diet(h)rich's, Paßt(h)ig's). Zins and Renten are distinguished thus, that Zins (interest) signifies that sum which the giver is obliged to pay and which the capitalist or proprietor has a right of demanding; eine Rente (rent) in as much as the proprietor or capitalist receives it and by that means increases his Eintünfte (income). Hence it will be seen that Zins and Rente, especially the former, do not exactly mean the same thing that "interest" and "rent" mean in English.

Syn. Zutrauen (sich), geschehen, ereignen (sich), begeben (sich), vorgehen, vorkommen. Geschehen (to happen, take place) is said of all events or changes; it is the result of doing. If any one does anything, it geschieht (takes place); e. g. "Light the candle!" — "It is already geschehen (done)." The same is expressed by vorgehen (to come to pass), but with the added idea, that what vorgeht excites especial attention and interest. Precisely this extent of meaning is possessed also by vorkommen (to fall out or upon), but with the secondary idea, that that which vorkaemt (happens), occurs unexpectedly. A change that excites particular attention, alters the state of things, and with which a longer succession of changes founded on it, and consequent upon each other, begins, heisst (happens, betides); it is a Begebenheit (event, incident). When one considers an event with respect to its changes, whether it is regarded as an effect of physical necessity or as a mere effect of chance, then one says, it has sich zugegetragen (has been brought about). It sometimes chances, happens, turns out (traegt sich zu), that continued rainy weather spoils the harvest. Ereignen (to befall) is used in speaking of certain important circumstances, in as far as they have their peculiar consequences. At the entry of the king, it ereignete sich (occurred, happened) that a scaffolding broke, by which many persons lost their lives.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

I. The first class changes the radical vowel e into a in the imperfect, and resumes it in the past participle. Ex., Geben, to give; imperfect gab; past part. gegeben. To this class must be added: bitten, to entreat (beg), which changes the radical vowel i in the same manner, as: imperfect bat; past part. gebeten.

II. The second class changes the radical vowel e or i into a in the imperfect, and in the past participle into o. Ex., nehmen, to take; imperf. nahm; past part. genommen; gewinnen, to win; imperf. gewann; past part. gewonnen. To these must be added gebären, produce (to give birth to), which has ä instead of i in the root, as: imperf. gebar; past part. geboren.

III. The third class changes the radical vowel i into a in the imperfect, and in the past part. into u. Ex., schlingen, to sling; imperf. schlang; past part. geschlungen; except dingen to hire; imperf. ding; past part. gebungen; schinden to flay; imperf. schind; past part. geschunden; and thun, to do; imperf. that; past part. gethan.

IV. The fourth class changes the radical vowel a into ie in the imperfect, and resumes it in the past participle. Ex., halten to hold; imperf. hielt; past part. gehalten; except fangen, to catch; imperf. fiug; past part. gefangen. The following conform to the principle of the rule, resuming in the past part. the radical vowel or diphthong of the present: laufen, to run; imperf. lief; past part. gelaufen; gehen to go; imperf. ging; past part. gegangen; heißen, to order; imperf. heiß; past part. geheißen; rufen, to call; imperf. rief; past part. gerufen; stoßen, to push; imperf. stieß; past part. gestoßen.

V. The fifth class changes the radical vowel ei into ie in the imperf. and in the past part. or before a consonant into i. Ex., bleiben, to remain; imperf. blieb; past part. geblieben; schneiden, to cut; imperf. schnitt; past part. geschnitten.

VI. The sixth class changes the radical vowels ä, au, e, i, ie, ö, ü, into o in the imperf. and past participle. Ex., schwären, to swear; imperf. schwör; past part. geschworen; saugen, to suck; imperf. saug; past part. gesogen; saufen to drink to excess; imperf. saß; past part. gesoffen; heben to lift; imperf. hob; past part. gehoben; verwirren, to embroil (to confuse); imperf. verworr; past part. verworren; bieten, to offer; imperf. bot; past part. geboten; schwören, to swear; imperf. schwör (schwür); past part. geschworen; liegen, to lie; imperf. lag; past part. gelogen.

VII. The seventh class changes the radical vowel a into u in the imperfect, and resumes it in the past participle. Ex., wachsen, to grow; imperf. wuchs; past part. gewachsen; stehen, to stand, has stand in the imperfect (formerly, however, stund), and in the past part. gestanden.

* The fifth and sixth classes include the greater part of the irregular verbs.
